THE COLLECT

Almighty God,
you show to those who are in error the light of your truth,
that they may return to the way of righteousness;
grant to all those who are admitted into the fellowship of Christ's religion that they may reject those things that are contrary to their profession, and follow all such things as are agreeable to the same through our Lord Jesus Christ, who is alive and reigns with you,
in the unity of the Holy Spirit,
one God now and for ever.

Our Mindful Art Group

Do you know that St Hildeburgh's runs a Mindful Art Group? On Tuesday afternoons, Alice Price can be found at the Quirky Café helping people to relax through simple art techniques. The group is open and free to all, with all the art equipment provided. For about an hour, people engage in an arty activity of their choice.

We have lots of inspiration and different techniques you can try, from adult colouring sheets to doodling patterns or flowers. Everyone is welcome to come and have a play with pencils, pens or paint and find some stillness in their busy lives. We're trying to spread the word about the group, so is there someone you know who may like to join us? Why not come along yourself to see what happens and invite a friend along. At the moment, Quirky Café is only open to the group on Tuesday afternoons, so there is space for more people to join us. We're there most Tuesdays at 2pm. If you're on Facebook, follow us @artforthesoulhoylake for up-to-date information. Quirky Café is 124E Market Street, just off Market Street by Holy Trinity Primary School.

FLOWER OF THE WEEK: VIOLET

94th in a series

Text and photographs by Peter Surridge.

Violets are among Britain's most charming wild flowers with ten species to be found around the country. They extend from rare, localised kinds like the Teesdale violet, growing only in Upper Teesdale and Cumbria, and the Fen violet, confined to isolated East Anglian sites, to the widespread and familiar sweet and dog violets.

The sweet or English violet, blooming in early spring, is usually purple but occasionally white with a purple spur and, as its name suggests, is fragrant. The dog violet looks similar but is normally only purple, flowers in early summer, and has no scent.

If a wild form of violet invades a garden lawn, it can be anything but sweet – it's difficult to eradicate – but it is generally welcome in informal or cottage-style gardens. Both purple and white forms arrived in my garden as 'passengers' in the roots of herbaceous plants acquired from relatives. Once extricated and transplanted, they made an attractive addition to the border edge, though I have to pull up unwanted seedlings to prevent them spreading too far.

Most violets are hardy, evergreen perennials, often with heart-shaped leaves, that spread by rhizomes – rooting stems growing on the soil surface – and reach 7cm-10cm (3in-4in) tall. Some also seed freely. Violets are the parents of pansies, hybrid violas and violettas.

In addition to the purple and white types of sweet violet, Viola odorata, there are more unusual types suitable for borders, pots or rockeries which include: Viola koreana Sylvetta (pictured), a variety with grey-green marbled leaves and mauve-pink flowers in spring; Viola odorata sulphurea, a form with scented, primrose-yellow flowers; Viola cornuta, the horned violet from Spain, with a succession of pale blue flowers from spring into summer;

Viola riviniana Purpurea, a form of the dog violet with purple foliage setting off the flowers beautifully, which is invasive but very effective in a wild garden; Viola biflora, a creeping species from North America with yellow flowers in early summer; Viola mandshurica Fuji Dawn, which has blue-ish flowers and cream-and-green variegated foliage; Viola sororia alba, with pure white flowers in spring and summer, Viola sororia Freckles (pictured), which has white flowers covered in violet speckles; and Viola Memories, a novel collection of violets in many shades.

A wide selection of violet plants and seeds is available from Devon Violet Nursery at www.sweetviolets.co.uk
