THE COLLECT

Lord of all life and power
who through the mighty resurrection of your Son overcame the old order of sin and death
to make all things new in him;
grant that we, being dead to sin and alive to you in Jesus Christ,
may reign with him in glory;
to whom with you and the Holy Spirit
be praise and honour, glory and might,
now and in all eternity.

FLOWER OF THE WEEK: DORONICUMS

99th in a series

Text by Peter Surridge.

Doronicums have appeared in garden centres after a long period out of fashion, giving newer gardeners the opportunity to discover these excellent border plants. They are perennials, long-lived and easy to grow, forming clumps 30cm-60cm (1ft-2ft) across. Their foliage is vivid mid-green and the flowers, bright yellow daisies, help to replace the gap left by fading daffodils. The long, strong stems make the blooms excellent for cutting. In the border, they mix well with the green bracts of euphorbias.

Various species of doronicum originate from Europe, the Mediterranean and the Middle East. The name is derived from the Arab term for the plant, doronigi, and its nickname, leopard's bane, refers to its reputed ability to ward off wild animals.

The best garden forms include the following: Doronicum x excelsum Harpur Crewe which dates from 1876, and grows 75cm (2ft 6in) tall and has large flowers, three or four to a stem; Doronicum pardalianches (meaning to "strangle leopards") has smaller flowers and can become invasive, perhaps strangling other roots; the old garden variety Doronicum columnae Miss Mason (pictured) forms a clump of heart-shaped leaves with scalloped edges and carries its flowers on 60cm (2ft) stems for some weeks; Doronicum orientale Spring Beauty is shorter, around 45cm (18in), but with double flowers.

All doronicums will grow in any reasonable soil in sun or partial shade. They are said to require well-drained earth but I've seen them flourishing in cold, wet clay. Cut down dead stems and divide over-large clumps in autumn. Pests and diseases are not a serious problem though slugs sometimes damage young shoots, earwigs occasionally nibble flowers and powdery mildew can disfigure the foliage.
