THE COLLECT

Almighty and everlasting God,
you have given us your servants grace,
by the confession of a true faith,
to acknowledge the glory of the eternal Trinity
and in the power of the divine majesty to worship the Unity:
keep us steadfast in this faith,
that we may evermore be defended from all adversities;
through Jesus Christ your Son our Lord,
who is alive and reigns with you,
in the unity of the Holy Spirit,
one God, now and for ever.

FLOWER OF THE WEEK: CAMPANULA

146th in a series.

Text and photograph by Peter Surridge.

CANTERBURY bells, once known as Coventry bells, are the most familiar of a huge range of campanulas or bellflowers. There are some 300 campanula species, including our native harebell, from tall border plants to tiny alpines. Some are annuals, others biennials and yet others perennials, though often short-lived. Most produce blue flowers though white forms occur naturally. In addition, pink, lavender and purple versions have been bred. Altogether, they make a wonderful and reliable range of garden plants.

The name campanula comes from the Latin for bell, campana, from which we also derive the term for bell-ringing, campanology. Bellflowers are grouped in four categories for garden purposes:

- Upright, such as Canterbury bells, Campanula medium, which grow up to 1.8m (6ft), though most are less than a metre in height. Varieties include Calycanthema, the "cup-and-saucer flower" with a ruff around the base of the bell; Bells of Holland, a dwarf sort in many colours reaching only 45cm (18in) and ideal for bedding. Other upright kinds are the milky bellflower, Campanula lactifolia, 1.5m (5ft) tall with white or pale blue star-like flowers and the giant of the genus, Campanula pyramidalis, the chimney bellflower, which can grow well over two metres in ideal conditions. These erect species are good for cutting.
- Clump-forming, as in Campanula carpatica, a perennial growing 30cm tall and up to 60cm across (12in x 24in). The variety Bressingham White has large white blooms, Jewel is low-growing with rich, deep blue flowers, and Turbinata produces pale, lavender-blue flowers.

- Spreading, a good example of which is Campanula cochlearifolia, known as fairies' thimbles because of its numerous small, pale blooms. Although only 8cm (3in) tall, it spreads 30cm (12in) or more. Elizabeth Oliver has double flowers of pale lavender, Miranda is greyblue and Miss Willmott pale blue.
- Trailing, such as the tender species Campanula isophylla, details of which appeared earlier in this series. Its nickname of falling stars explains all it is often grown for hanging baskets. The flowers are vivid blue, though there are other shades among the Kristal Hybrids. Many campanula species are protected by a winter carpet of dry snow in their natural, mountainous habitats and occasionally will be killed by wet conditions in winter. Many, however, thrive and self-seed in Britain. They tolerate any reasonable, well-drained soil, preferably neutral or limey, in sun or light shade, but can be attacked by greenfly, slugs, powdery mildew and rust.
